

RELEASE IN PART B6

---

From: Sullivan, Jacob J <SullivanJJ@state.gov>
Sent: Thursday, March 4, 2010 6:37 PM
To: H
Subject: Fw: Insulza speech

Fyi

----- Original Message -----

From: Kelly, Craig A
To: Sullivan, Jacob J
Sent: Thu Mar 04 18:34:05 2010
Subject: Fw: Insulza speech

USOAS summary of Insulza remarks.

----- Original Message -----

From: Armstrong, Robert A
To: Amselem, W Lewis; Rojas, Fernando D
Cc: Kelly, Craig A; Riva-Geoghegan, Margarita M
Sent: Thu Mar 04 12:18:46 2010
Subject: RE: Insulza speech

On democracy, Insulza repeated his line from 2005 (actually taken from Condi Rice) that it was not enough to be elected democratically; one had to govern democratically. He reviewed his own performance applying the Inter-American Democratic Charter (IADC) over the past five years and concluded that the record was good. He conceded that he had intervened too late in the Honduras case but said that was because Zelaya waited until too late to extend the invitation, asserting that he cannot intervene without an invitation from the executive branch.

"The truth is that we did everything possible to restore democracy in Honduras," he said.

Insulza said the Honduras experience showed the OAS needs to develop "swifter and more flexible procedures" to allow it to respond more preemptively. This would include mechanisms for the OAS to "make itself present in countries where there are possible signs of instability."

Insulza committed to "unreserved support" for the OAS human rights mechanisms, while respecting their autonomy.

"Democracy is more than elections and includes such essential components as respect for human rights, freedom of expression, separation and independence of the branches of government, respect for the rule of law and the democratic institutional system, and transparency and honesty in government. It also establishes a link between democracy, development, and equity," he said.

He talked about "modern multilateralism," modeled on the EU, as his vision for the OAS. "Modern multilateralism," he said, eschews Cold War divisions and "we all work together to build on our common principles."

On the management side, Insulza claimed he had inherited a bad financial situation at the OAS and improved it. Nonetheless, he said, "we need more resources." He committed to seek them from non-traditional sources such as OAS observers, NGOs, the private sector and academia. He claimed his efforts to improve transparency and accountability had been commended by external auditors.

Insulza committed to "give fresh impetus to the gender issue at the OAS."

Robert A. Armstrong

Political Counselor/Alternate Representative U.S. Mission to the Organization of American States 202-647-6375; mobile:

B6

-----Original Message-----

From: Amselem, W Lewis

Sent: Thursday, March 04, 2010 10:07 AM

To: Rojas, Fernando D; Armstrong, Robert A

Subject: FW: Insulza speech

Could one of you or your minions take this on? .

This email is UNCLASSIFIED

-----Original Message-----

From: Kelly, Craig A

Sent: Thursday, March 04, 2010 9:47 AM

To: Amselem, W Lewis

Cc: Gonzalez, Juan S; Valenzuela, Arturo A

Subject: Insulza speech

Lew:

Can someone do a good summary for S? Pls highlight democracy measures, reforms and Honduras.

Thanks,

ck