B6

Here's some background: This piece is for a year-ending look-ahead issue of The Economist and we were asked to write about America's priorities and place in the world in 2011, ten years after 9/11 and twenty years after the end of the Cold War. The team (Jake, Josh, Anne-Marie, Derek) felt that this was a good opportunity to pull together for a wide audience some of the key themes you sounded in Krakow and elsewhere, and build on the President's call to action at UNGA. We don't say anything new here, its true, but the idea was to lay down another marker that these are issues that are important to you and to the administration.

I just got the draft and don't think it says anything. What is the question we are trying to answer or issue we were asked to address in this?
