POLITICO Breaking News

Former congresswoman Susan Molinari was named head of Google's Washington office on Thursday, increasing the tech giant's government firepower at a time of rising scrutiny from lawmakers and regulators on high-stakes issues that include privacy and antitrust. Molinari will begin in mid-March as Google's vice president of public policy and government relations for the Americas. She assumes the portfolio of Alan Davidson, who announced in November that he was leaving as head of Google's Washington policy and lobbying operations.
